Pat Robertson's latest novel, "Dancing on a High Wire," begins with the breakup of a man and woman. He has concluded that he is gay. That emotionally volatile situation, and those that follow it, all explore the theme of people faced with desperate adjustments to reality: A ballet dancer whose life and career are threatened by cancer; a mother whose daughter could not make a right choice in youth if her life depended on it, and who is about to be released after serving hard time for a ...
